

MOMCILO SIMIC

BIOGRAPHY

Momcilo Simic is a predominantly self-taught artist with an acute eye for detail and composition. Originally from sokolac, republic srpska (bih, former yugoslavia), momcilo obtained a ba in psychology from the university of belgrade (serbia). After spending more than a decade working as a psychologist, he moved to canada in 1999, where his passion for fine art was reignited and further developed.

His technical versatility is emphasized in his portraits, multi-figurative compositions and landscape paintings – all of which have solidified his reputation as one of canada's leading representational painters. His work has been featured in the toronto art expo, the portrait society of canada and the international arc salon of 2012 to name a few. In 2013, his painting, twelve, was a finalist in the kingston prize, which is one of canada's biggest bi-annual portrait competitions. The same painting was published in the catalogue of art renewal center international art competition as a finalist. He would go on to repeat his success once again as his painting, school friends, was also a finalist in the 2015 kingston prize.

In addition, Momcilo's work has been featured in several art and entertainment-based media outlets, including magazine art, grand magazine, rogers and leafs tv.

*as a portrait artist he was commissioned by the law society of upper canada (osgood hall in toronto) to paint the portrait of the chief justice of ontario.
